Loach pilots & Crew Chief has big ones.

By W. Page

Great book written by a young OCS Lt. Loach pilot who celebrated his 21st birthday in Viet Nam:

"It was 8 April 1969, my twenty-first birthday. Now, I smiled to myself, I could take a drink legally. I could also vote. I could even get, maybe, a slight reduction in my car insurance rates, if I were back home. It all sounded pretty silly in Vietnam."

"Coming in on the downwind, Crockett's M-60 poked out the door, trailing red smoke for all the world to see. I was coming back from my first scout mission, in command of my own ship, and trailing red smoke marking our kills— including my first from the air."

"The emotion was one of excitement mixed with horror. My hands were trembling and there were no words. There was no need for them. I had engaged the enemy in combat, face to face. I had made mistakes, but I had accomplished a mission and survived. And I had drawn my first blood. Happy twenty-first birthday."

Am sure there were many other young men who also celebrated their 21st birthdays in country having been sent in harms way by our government.

In the very last line of the book's Postscript Co-author Robert Anderson ended with a comment that far too many citizens and non-citizens living in the USA disregarded during Viet Nam and continue to disregard today. Mr. Anderson is absolutely right when he said "Blame the war, not the Warrior!"

Thank You Col. Mills learned a lot about what my father did there with y'all. Great Book
By Amazon Customer

I found this book when I did a google search on my dad. This book came up so I had to buy it. Not knowing about a lot of what he did there as he doesn't talk about it much, well only the funny things that happened is what I hear about. This book makes me see him and others that were there with him in a different way. hearing the voices on the phone out of some of the men in this book has a total new meaning to me. After reading this book I can see why the men still talk on the phone today. A true Band of Bothers both there in 1969 and still to the day. My hats off to you Col. Mills thank you for showing me what my father did there from such a first hand experience. The service medals that are on the wall at his house have so much more of an understanding to me after reading your book. Thank You to all of The Outcasts and you Col. Mills what a great book.

Good read
By Steve Mueller

This book is an essential read for anyone involved or have known those involved in helicopter operations. I have fought wildland fires for 23 years, and have worked directly with several Vietnam helicopter vets. Their service to our country, both in Vietnam and domestically, needs to be recognized. Most have now retired or passed on, but their efforts were invaluable and should not be forgotten
