Seventeen-year-old Nicandro Stellan Colby is doing his best not to completely freak out, despite the fact that his parents named him after a romance novel zombie, he has no clue what to do after his fast-approaching high school graduation from middle-of-nowhere Wilmurth, Texas, and oh yeah, he just accidentally asked out the boy of his dreams over the school intercom. But all is not lost. Helping Nick remember how to breathe and navigate the choppy waters of dating, surviving senior year, and even learning how to drive are fouled-mouthed lady-in-disguise, Carmen; always-sweaty yet fiercely loyal Connor; and, of course, the guiding hand of Sydney Walker, Nick's longtime crush and first ever boyfriend. Yet when Nick starts having increasingly petrifying panic attacks, he soon realizes the vast difference between admiring someone from afar and falling under the pressures of their influence.

I love books that make me cry

By Amy Rhodes

I love books that make me cry, have a beautiful narrative, and teach a valuable lesson. A.J.J. Bourque's newest novel does all that for me and more. That's why this book is a treasure to me and needs to be shared. Have tissues ready for this book. It is that special.

Beautiful Prose

By Amazon Customer

There are a number of books about struggling LGBTQ+ youth, and I've read quite a few. This book is not like many of them, and easily stands out. I found myself laughing out loud quite often about the way the main character views and explains little details on his life. That being said, this book tackles issues of self-talk and the darkness in the world with honesty and with grace. The character growth is done very well and I really feel that readers will come to understand how Nicandro changes, and possibly find something beautiful in themselves along the way.
