Relevant and Timely

By Sartori

Rick Miller does a great job getting to the heart of what we, as educators, need to keep as a priority. This is the fact that the relationships we develop with students are the most important aspect of educating. With the tremendous amount of energy and focus being on the common core, testing, growing students academically, etc. we tend to forget that none of this can be accomplished without adults who express their belief in the students. This easy to read book brings home strategies and real life applications to help students believe in themselves while reminding educators why they got involved in this career in the first place.

By Mary Jeanne Munroe

With the training from Rick Miller aspects of the program are readily implemented and cultural change can begin.

Hopefully, more impact can be made.
